SOMEPLACE AND SOMEHOW

The lag between selective service demand and supply, according to official figures and the statements of responsible officials, has become too great for safety.

There is no secret about what has happened. Many local draft boards have fallen behind their quotas. Restricted by age limits and essential occupations, they have run out of selectees to feed into the ever-growing armed forces.

Lt. Col. Carl Wahl, head of Ohio selective service manpower division, sums up the situation in one sentence: "Some place along the line has got to give."

As might be expected, deferred farm workers are first to draw the attention of Maj. Gen. Hershey, national selective service director—not because of anything prejudicial to agriculture in Gen. Hershey's viewpoint but because they are the largest accessible pool of manpower. The other major pool of manpower, essential industrial workers, is not nearly so accessible because it is surrounded by the greater prestige of the work it is performing.

Yet, if neither of these major sources of manpower can be tapped, the third possibility—lifting the upper age limit—offers no hope. Military authority was responsible for its reduction from 45 to 38, not arbitrarily but because experience proved that older men were not suitable for military purposes.

"Some place along the line has got to give." There will be differences of opinion. Before it's over a lot of fur will fly. But unless selective service quotas are reduced, the selectees will have to be found where they exist—and that long since ceased to be in the wide open spaces. All the available manpower was drawn long ago; draft boards now are tackling the "unavailable" manpower.

SHOE THAT FITS

Secretary of War Stimson's press conference observation that the Anzio beachhead should remind calamity howlers to keep their shirts on when things seem to be going bad was not aimed at any special chapter of the howlers' lit. It was for all and sundry whom the shoe might fit, and the knowledgeable reader will realize some of the wearers hold very high positions indeed.

It might be an instructive experiment for the rest of us to try on the shoe for size. The Anzio beachhead has been only one excuse for calamity howling. Pearl Harbor was another. Dunkirk, of course, was an especially fine one; if the British had taken their calamity howlers seriously, the war might have been lost after Dunkirk.

There is a special kind of calamity howling concerned with post-war prospects. It seems sometimes that the howlers are so afraid of what might happen if the war stopped that they would rather keep it going forever, which is an example of the absurdities to which calamity howling can lead.

Another special kind might be called the Japanese division. It specializes in the apparent impossibility of bringing the war with Japan to a conclusion—an illusion the Japanese do not seem to share, and an illusion which is being shattered almost daily by offensive actions against Japan which succeed with almost monotonous regularity.

There is, of course, danger in over-confidence, but in under-confidence there is the misleading confusion which Secretary Stimson decries. In the ideal balance between the extremes, Americans will keep their shirts on unless they need to take them off to work harder, not because they lose their heads.

AN AIRTIGHT MAGNOT LINE

Germany's reliance on the Magnot line theory of defense is now stated without apology by spokesmen for the German army. Newest development is the announced completion of airtight defenses on the coast of Denmark. Neither these nor any other section of the defenses against invasion, Germans are reassured, can be outflanked—the fatal weakness of the original Magnot line.

But what must Germans, themselves, think as they remember how the supposedly fool-proof Magnot line which France built at great expense was outflanked not only by the military breakthrough in Belgium but by their "fifth column" inside France? Will they believe that ruthless police work has eliminated a similarly strong Allied "fifth column" in France, as well as Denmark, Norway, Belgium, and the Netherlands? Furthermore, will Germans believe their vaunted defense, stretched from Norway south through the Bay of Biscay and east in the Mediterranean to the Straits of Bosphorus cannot be outflanked by military action? After all, it was Germany, itself, which proved the fallacy of the theory of static defense—the same Germany which now asks its own people to believe the theory is fool-proof.

RELIEF PROMISED

Steps taken to ease the shortage of essential garments for children, which was reported in 40 states by American Home Economics association after a survey made from last Dec. 26 to Jan. 15, will be studied by the association in a second survey of civilian scarcities starting March 15.

Donald Nelson, war production board chairman suggesting the new survey, has said that the official steps taken after the first survey should bring relief to the buying public in shortage areas by March 15. The association's fact-finding, therefore, will be aimed at checking results.

There probably is no war topic discussed more regularly or with more vigor in families with small children than the problem of keeping them clothed. Not only have many essential garments been impossible to find, but many of the garments that could be found proved to be of unsatisfactory quality; they could not withstand the kind of wear children give their clothing. While many civilian complaints about wartime inconveniences are just that—complaints about inconveniences—the availability of wearable clothing for children is vastly more than a convenience.

MUSSOLINI AND THE SAMURAI

Benito Mussolini's reported claim of spiritual brotherhood with the Japanese based on execution of his son-in-law, Count Ciano, makes an engrossing speculation. "I put honor above everything else, exactly like a Japanese warrior," the former dictator of Italy is reported to have said.

The terms of Japanese honor are not easy for a western mind to comprehend; they do not square with Christian ethics. Mussolini probably knows no more about them than he does about honor in Italy, which is a thing he never understood, either. Still it would be helpful to know how the Japanese will take to this spiritual brotherhood he claims.

In Japan, a political leader who betrays the national interest and comes a cropper deals with honor in one of two forms. For his own honor, he is obliged to take his own life. If he fails, the honor of others is satisfied by taking his life for him. It probably will be as great a shock to Japan as it is to the United States to realize that Mussolini is still around and still blustering.

THE STARS SAY:

For Sunday, February 20

SUNDAY'S horoscope puts the emphasis on cultural, spiritual or out of the routine activities, with much to be gained in the pursuit of pleasure, exceptional ambitions, or out of the ordinary studies or aspirations. All novel or curious matter should be intriguing, albeit surrounded by peculiar dangers or entanglements. With discretion and reasonable reactions to these there might be success and gratification, even in erratic circumstances.

Those whose birthday it is are on the eve of a year of peculiar experiences or adventures, in which irregular, erratic or strange impulses may lure into dangerous although glamorous fields. This may be in business or in personal channels in which the emotions and impulses may have an intuitive, occult or mystical urge. These unusual activities have possibility of success and satisfaction if a degree of discretion, reason and common sense are maintained.

A child born on this day may possess some exceptional talents, lean to novel or unique employments, in which it should succeed, if erratic or strange urges be held in practical lines.

For Monday, February 21

Monday's astrological forecast is for a day on which the emotional, romantic, artistic and more idealistic relations should gain the major attention, since there may be bare safety and progress attained in such expression, as more realistic and practical concerns may be expressed by wayward, reckless, tempestuous or erratic impulses. Dangers of many natures are indicated. Postpone all routine matters when possible, as the proclivities are on the subjective side.

Those whose birthday it is may expect a year of advancement, pleasant and prosperous relations of all pertaining to their inner, finer and more idealistic life. Spiritual, artistic, romantic or domestic and social affairs may be highly stimulated with exceptional talents or creative impulses flourishing. Against this there may be impractical, hectic and erratic urges that hold danger, defeat and disaster.

A child born on this day may possess unusual talents or exceptional creative skills, with art, music, or other cultural expressions. It may also have erratic or peculiar impulses.

RED CROSS CHAPTER'S PART IN WAR

Classes In Nurses Aid Work

Heading the list of important wartime services of Red Cross is the Nurses Aid work which has been of tremendous help to hospitals since the beginning of the war and the mass enlistment of trained nurses in the armed forces.

Two classes of aides have been trained here and those who are not giving their spare time in work at both hospitals are often engaged in hospital work in camps where they have gone to be with their husbands.

Long Hours, Hard Work
Long hours, hard work and little glory go with the job of the Nurses Aides, but all of them say their reward is in the knowledge that they are helping in the fight to win the war by releasing nurses for active duty.

The first class of volunteer nurses aides was organized April 23, 1942, and completed the 60-hour course, 35 of instruction and 45 of supervised practice, plus the 20-hour first aid course, on June 5, 1942. The second group started Aug. 17 and finished a month later.

Mrs. Harriet Stahl of Columbiana, registered nurse, was the instructor for the class work for the 45 weeks in the two units.

Forty-four of the women are serving at local hospitals, many of them with almost 200 hours service to their credit. The workers receive no remuneration of any kind. They act as assistants to nurses, make beds, give baths, take temperatures, pulse and respiration

Sample Day's Diet For Two-Year-Old

BY LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

THE MODERN tendency as I said last week, is to allow children extra food in addition to milk much earlier in life than formerly. It used to be feared that the infant's digestion was not anything like an adult's and that it could not handle solid food.

Dr. Clendingen will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

There has been much recent work on the digestive secretion at different ages and this indicates that the child at seven months begins to elaborate secretions which rapidly approach the amount and concentration of adults. For instance, taking as a standard of stomach secretion the amount of hydrochloric acid secreted (and this is the best standard we have because stomach digestion depends upon hydrochloric acid almost entirely) the new born infant has a figure of 20. At six months this has risen to 25; at twelve months to 40. And during the first year it jumps almost double to 70. At fifteen years it is about 250, which is the adult figure.

So we see that a one to two year infant has the capacity to digest about a third as well as the adult. Even this figure, however, is somewhat rigid and in practice it is found that from the end of the first year on the infant can digest nearly anything, provided some allowance is made for the state of the teeth and other, less common sense considerations. In short, what the infant of that age eats is limitless, but the preparation, cooking, subdivision, purring of it, etc., are the prime considerations.

Furthermore, a newly discovered digestive ferment, similar to the familiar pepsin, cathepsin, has been found to be present in infants, and young children's stomachs in amounts greater than pepsin, and it increases early in life at a greater rate than pepsin. Since it acts as a digestant on about the same foods as pepsin, we have a situation that gives us even more confidence in the infant's digestive powers.

Here, then, is a sample day's diet for the second year, as approved by the very latest and most scientific authority I can find on infant feeding:

Breakfast

2 to 3 ounces of fruit, 2 to 3 ounces of cooked cereal with cream and a small amount of sugar, 1 glass of milk, 1/2 slice of toast.

Noon

1 egg, or 1 to 2 table-spoonfuls of ground meat, 1 table-spoonful of mashed or baked potato, 2 to 3 ounces of vegetable, 1/2 slice toast, or 1 graham cracker with butter, 1 glass of milk, a simple dessert, such as custard.

Evening

Milk soup (vegetable puree with milk and butter), custard, or cottage cheese, or ground liver, or egg, 2 ounces of vegetables, 1/2 slice toast, or 1 graham cracker, with butter, 2 ounces of fruit, 1 glass of milk (or less if milk soup has been given).

THE LITTLE DOG BARKED by ANNE ROWE

CHAPTER TWENTY-EIGHT
Linda wasn't stupid. She knew that her life was in danger until Mack's murderer—who also was either her attacker or his confederate—had been caught. In other words, she really was a brave girl, actually creating a totally wrong impression.

It was a gratifying conclusion, but didn't solve the murder or lighten my mood. Nor was the wire I had in my pocket particularly consoling.

It was from Thyer McVane's office that Linda arrived shortly after 11:00, and read:

POLICE INQUIRY RE BOSS WHEREABOUTS RECEIVED. WHO IS MURDERED? BOSS FISHING SOMEWHERE AROOSTOOK UNREACHABLE BUT PLANNED ARRIVE FERN COVE SATURDAY. PLEASE TELL POLICE. RALPH SHERWIN, OFFICE MANAGER.

I laughed when I'd read it the time, picturing the uproar into which the Inspector's telegram must have thrown the McVane office, the frantic attempts to locate the truant "Boss."

But at a second reading it had made me angry, and blue. McVane would arrive Saturday, and this was Wednesday. That meant three more days in which I had, or felt I had, the responsibility for Linda. McVane had had no right to add to me with his word.

I stamped up the steps of the Inspector's porch, thoroughly disgusted, handed my telegram to Sergeant Hatch—who was playing solitaire before a crackling fire—and marched out to stand in the road, shivering deeper into my coat, undecided whether to turn back or go on.

The Sergeant's fire had emphasized the chilliness of the evening. But all the same, it was very beautiful. Still light a little past eight—by the grace of northern latitude and daylight-saving time.

Soon I found myself walking toward the cove of uneasy memories and thoughts about the possible identity of old Mack's murderer.

George Vickery might have cut the fly rope, as the Inspector had said. But—everything pointed to Bill Parris as the logical murder suspect, no matter if his step-mother insisted he didn't know about Linda.

There was the situation of his family, openly dependent on Burns Loring's bounty. Ione Welland had seen Bill near the winch at the critical moment. He looked like the man Linda and I had seen climb out of the downstairs window and could have been the object of Little Stray's fury. Besides, why had he rushed to the vet's house the moment he had heard the injured dog was a potential witness? To bring Stray chocolate, or—?

On the other hand, Parris had picked Stray up when he lay kicked and hurt in a corner. I still could see him, coming across the stage, holding the limp little body as if it were something precious.

Too bad the Inspector hadn't found out more about the scandal that had separated Linda's parents according to Mack's clippings.

What really had it been all about? Probably the Inspector was right when he said I must have been some woman plotting to feather her nest by blackmail.

Plotting everywhere. Years backster party, so I can prove to you in the past and today, right here. Two childish old men out to "sabotage" my play. Mrs. Parris out to cheat Linda of her father's money. The three hanging together, flatteringly Josie Kilborn into co-operation, attempting to lure Tom Linwood into their ranks.

Successfully, judging by the director's treatment of me. But: whose tool had he become? Surely not the powerless old playwrights? No! Mrs. Parris. She must have told him who Linda really was, promised him a share in her brother's estate—and when—

Inspector Pettengill could tease me all he wanted about my dislike of Linwood, but there was more to it than hurt vanity. Call it a hunch, call it instinct—

I had traversed the dark lane from the road to the clearing while thinking these thoughts, and now I walked slowly down to the shore through the ferns, keeping close to the bordering thicket where I could faintly discern a path.

And then, suddenly, there was a house I hadn't noticed before—a small cabin with a railed porch, perched on a rock above the water, half buried in foliage. It looked unoccupied. Some of its windows were shuttered. Others had shades drawn over them from the inside. And there was a padlock at the door.

I sat down on the edge of the porch—it was just the right height to make a good seat—to see the final aftermath of sunset, when I heard a voice behind me say: "Huh, but it's cold, Honeyboy. Hold me closer."

Sondra Marshall—affection, Southern drawl and all! No one answered her demand—in words. But after an interval of silence I heard her laugh, low and throatily. And then she said: "I wish it were over, lover. I wish he were dead and we were free, and together, with a long sigh."

A man's voice murmured an answer. I couldn't understand the words or place the voice. It sounded like a reproach—a gentle reproach. And Sondra defended herself, incautiously loud.

"But Honey, I promised! I must go through with it. I don't mind much. He's so ill, it won't last long, and—it won't really be a marriage. I couldn't bear that, Honeyboy! I couldn't be unfaithful to you—"

"Honeyboy" murmured something in reply. He had a soft baritone and an inflection that was beginning to sound familiar.

More reproaches probably. For Sondra said in her most affected manner: "But lover, I'm doing all I can! He's been frightfully difficult the last days. It's always 'I'm tired, Dear. Run along.' Sometimes I'm afraid he'll die before the wedding. Don't you think I want to be his widow, with all that money? Please don't scold me all the time, Honeyboy. Hold me close—kiss me."

And then a sort of purr, and sounds showing "Honeyboy" was accepting the invitation.

I was listening shamelessly straining my ears to recognize the man's voice. But I had no wish to be an eavesdropper of Sondra's love-making.

And so I got up, as soundlessly as I could manage, and walked back the way I'd come. One thought—I can't! He's been frightfully difficult the last days. It's always 'I'm tired, Dear. Run along.' Sometimes I'm afraid he'll die before the wedding. Don't you think I want to be his widow, with all that money? Please don't scold me all the time, Honeyboy. Hold me close—kiss me."

I'm not such an utter idiot with my suspicions of—Tom Linwood!

My prayer was answered. As I approached the police cottage I saw Inspector Pettengill coming from the opposite direction on the shore road.

He was such a welcome sight. I rushed toward him at top speed arriving all out of breath and gasping out incoherently: "Thank goodness! You're back! I had no idea it was there. It looked empty, but they were inside. You'll catch them if you hurry. Sondra and her boy friend—I could swear it's he, yet I can't swear to it."

It took the Inspector about ten shrewd questions to make sense of my gibberish and find out that "he" was, presumably, Linwood.

"I'll get a flashlight. It'll soon be dark," he said briefly, running up his steps over my protest that I had a powerful torch in my pocket, and one was enough. And presently we were moving toward the fern clearing. I at a trot, to keep up with my companion's rapid strides, and repeating more rationally all I had overheard.

Sondra's — and "Honeyboy's"—retreat lay peacefully in the paling afterglow when we got to it, and looked as completely untenanted as before. Inspector Pettengill and I crept close to the small building and stood listening. There wasn't a sound. Not a murmur—not a laugh. He jabbed a finger at the padlock and looked doubtfully at me.

"I know. There must be another door in the rear," I whispered. And there was. An ordinary door with an ordinary keyhole. A thread of a trail led down to the tide line between large boulders.

The Inspector knocked on it—waited a moment—knocked again. Louder, this time. At last he called: "Anyone in there? Open the door. It's Inspector Pettengill."

There was no answer.

"Sure you haven't been—er—hearing things?" he asked skeptically.

"Sure I have been hearing—thing," I told him hotly.

He mumbled something. Either his beloved "Ayah" or "I see" or both. Took a fancy penknife from his pocket and started working with it around the keyhole.

Not half a minute later the door opened under his touch, and we walked into an empty house.

Canada Shipbuilding Slowdown Seen; U.S. Builds Victory Ships

By ALEX JANUSITIS
United Press Staff Correspondent
VANCOUVER, B. C.—The future of British Columbia's ship-building industry grew more uncertain today in the wake of a statement by a prominent shipbuilding official that the shipyards will not switch over to construction of the new and faster type of Victory freighter.

This official predicted that in about a month the B. C. yards will have slowed production to 100-day ships, instead of the 40 to 60 days in effect a few months ago.

The reason given for no change in the type of ships to be built here is lack of facilities in Canada for building the necessary type of engine for the faster freighters.

The United States is switching over to Victory ships that will cruise at about 15 knots, or reach a top speed of 17 to 18 knots—five knots faster than the freighters now being built in Canada. The speedier vessels will have a much greater advantage in competing in the post-war maritime trade, and it is believed that this is the chief reason why the United States is building them.

The faster ships need turbine engines, while the slower Liberty vessels use reciprocating engines. In Canada, the latter are built at Toronto and Montreal, but there is no company in the Dominion turning out turbine engines suitable for large freighters.

Set Good Record
British Columbia shipyards, which are credited with setting up a splendid record in turning out ships when they were needed most, have, it is believed, enough contracts to keep them going until the end of 1944, but beyond that their future is uncertain.

The B. C. shipyards have produced more than 60 per cent of the total of 200 merchant ships of the 10,000-ton class that have been built and delivered in Canada. The 200th vessel, the Windermere Park, was delivered recently to Park Steamships by the West Coast shipbuilders. Five B. C. yards are now building 10,000-ton freighters, and a sixth is engaged in naval building.

One shipyard here—the Burrard Drydock Co.—has established an all-Canada record for perfect vessels completed. Twelve ships turned out by the company have been taken on trial runs and passed inspection without a single defect recorded on the "moan" list.

The record is unusual in world shipbuilding history, since some defect is usually discovered in a vessel when it goes on her first run. The tests are severe and before being turned over to the owners every craft must be approved by Lloyd's Registry of Shipping, British Ministry of War Shipping and British Ministry of War Transport surveys.

The "moan" list customarily contains a number of details which must be corrected in a vessel.

The center of gravity of the human body is to the right.

We promise

*At the top of every War Bond you buy are these words:
"The United States promises to pay..."
Those may not sound like such brave words. But actually they are the hope of the world!*

THEY ARE a promise by the country to its citizens, but also a promise by the citizens to the country and to the people of the world; a promise that obligations recognized and accepted will be paid in full.

The millions of us who buy those Bonds, do proudly and solemnly promise:

... that partial victory shall not breed the kind of weakening over-confidence which can rob us of complete victory;

... that unity shall rise above all squabbles, and differences;

... that this war shall be fought through to a finish with all that we have and all that we are;

... that the sacrifices of today, and the larger sacrifices of tomorrow, shall be accepted willingly, in the humble knowledge that they are small when set beside the sacrifices of our men who are fighting;

... that we will not turn our backs on the rest of the world after victory is won; but will reach out the hand of friendship, and assume our proper share of responsibility in seeing that freedom, equality, and orderly justice become possible for all people, everywhere;

... that neither our own fighting men nor any of our allies shall be let down in any way whatsoever now, or in the hard-fighting days to come, or in the peace that will follow victory;

... that we, the people, will dig into our pockets, purses, and savings to make the success of the War Bond program a symbol of our determination.

These things we subscribe to. These things we believe in. These things we promise.

Struthers Falls Before Fast-Stepping Quakers 42 To 33

BROWNMEN RETAIN EARLY LEAD WITH ENTRIEN AS ACE

Salem Squad Clicks With Smoothness To Claim Tenth Victory

Clicking with all-around smoothness once again, the Salem High basketball squad downed a formidable Struthers aggregation 42-33 in the small Struthers gym last night for their tenth win of the year in 16 regular starts.

It was the seventh loss for the Big Red in 19 games. Salem took an early lead 3-0, but the Struthers came up to the front 4-3 as half the first period was over before the Quakers really started to roll. From then on Salem was out in front by a comfortable margin.

Late in the first stanza the Quaker offense began chopping the Struthers zone defense to pieces and from then on the opponents couldn't control any of the Salem players. The first period ended with Salem leading 12-4 and the locals let 12 points be their pace for the next two periods also, while Struthers tried hard and managed 11 in the second but fell to 7 points in the third. At the end of the half it was 24-15 and had increased to 36-22 by the time the final started.

Entriens Has Big Night

In the last period—which was rough and tumble most of the way—Coach Brown took Brian out of the game for safe keeping, as he had three fouls against him. With Smith, who is considerably shorter than Brian, at center the big Struthers pivot man, Dan Kossick, started a rally with two buckets in a row. But the Quakers held a reasonable lead although they were outscored in the period 11 to 6.

Outstanding from the floor was Flick Entriens with 16 points. Entriens turned in a fine defensive show and was plenty "hot" from his right side of the floor.

The balance of Quaker scoring was well divided with Lanney totaling eight points, Appedisian seven, Schaeffer six, and Brian five.

The game was the fifth in a row in which Salem has made at least 40 points and it was the sixth victory in seven games for the new team combination.

Kossick, Yurich Star

At the four line the Quakers had a good night, hitting eight of 12 tries. For an equal number of chances the Big Red collected on just five. Salem scored eight baskets on long shots, seven underneath, one on a rebound and another on a fast break. Struthers collected 10 from under the hoop, three on rebounds, and just one out on the floor.

Both Dan Kossick and Larry Yurich stood out for Struthers. The two teamed up under the basket to use their height and scoring ability to collect 22 of the 33 points. Both men equalled Brian's height and their reaches were just a bit over the Salem ace's. However, Brian was aided in his rebounding and backboard work by agile Mutt Schaeffer, who gave one of his finest shows both on offense and defense.

Appedisian and Lanney functioned effectively in the back court, breaking up the zone defense early in the game. Their passes were excellent in most of the play.

SOLDIER'S COMPLAINT BRINGS 700 LETTERS

SOMEWHERE IN AUSTRALIA—Corp. Alexander Hadley, 26, a gunner on a lonely Southwest Pacific island, used to gripe because he never got any mail.

He wrote a letter to his mother, Mrs. S. A. Alexander (1521 Central ave.), Charlotte, N. C., saying his "morale was low but a few good snappy letters from you folks would help a lot."

Mrs. Alexander sent the letter to the "Charlotte Observer," which published it.

Since that time, a few months ago, Hadley has received more than 700 letters. On his biggest day he got 65 of them. Seventy-five of the girls, aged 15 to 50, sent snapshots of themselves. Most of the girls were around 18.

"I love 'em all," said Hadley. "There's Janice and Jennie and Peggy and Barbara and Helen and Bonnie and Gladys and Inez and Margaret and Hazel and Agnes and Mickey and lots more. They're swell girls."

The letters are still rolling in, from North and South Carolina, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. He has been able to answer about 200 of them with the help of his pl. Mc. Joseph P. McCarthy, 21, of Downers Grove, Ill.

The traffic death toll in the United States in 1943 was about 23,000.

It's Still Secret — That Victory Garden Yield of Last Summer

(By International News Service)
COLUMBUS — For the most part, Newspapersmen are willing to take for fact the information contained in "handouts" which reach the pressrooms in the capital and the state office buildings.

Periodically, however, a news release comes up which leaves the newsmen questioning. Such a release was one sent up apparently by some agriculture department division, although it contained no specific credit to that effect.

Whatever the source, newsmen for the most part threw out the release on the subject of 1943 victory garden production, after a single look. To them it contained too many discrepancies.

For instance, it asserted that the Ohio Victory Garden council reported over a million victory gardens in 1943. That would be a garden for about every four men, women and children in the state who do not live on farms, since farm plots can hardly be classed as "victory gardens." The newsmen didn't believe there were that many. Discrepancy Number One.

Production Too High
Second, the report was that over 400,000 tons of food had been produced in the million gardens. That's 800 pounds per garden. Most of the newsmen, who had tinkered around with Victory gardens themselves, decided that 800 pounds average was far too high. Discrepancy No. 2.

Then the release said that over two million quarts of food had been preserved from the million Victory gardens. That was only two quarts for each garden—which supposedly produced 800 pounds of food, but only two quarts of it can be eaten. This, the newsmen decided, was far too low. Their gardens had produced more for winter use than that, and they made no claim to being even average gardeners. Discrepancy No. 3.

Lastly, the release stated that the average production per garden amounted to $102.61. This figure was thrown out by the suspicious newsmen for several reasons. For one thing it was too exact. The newsmen wondered why, with all other estimates of yield limited to round figures of hundreds of thousands, the "experts" responsible for the release could arrive at a production figure accurate down to the last cent.

Also, the newsmen had not known of any survey asking victory gardeners to place a value on their crops. They themselves had not been asked; inquiry revealed that none of their victory gardening friends had been approached. Thirdly, none of them would place a value that high on the products of any victory garden with which they were acquainted. And then that would have given the state a Victory Garden production of $10,260,000 in addition to other foods raised.

No, the newsmen decided, they would not do a story on the release. They were too proud of their own reputations for accuracy to risk them on such a report.

And that is why you have not read previously a story on just how much Victory gardens yielded in Ohio last year.

ALLIES TURN BACK

ments were reported to have reached the railway station, about a mile from the center of town.

(A dispatch from Lynn Heinzelring, Associated Press correspondent, said Allied troops had entered the station, but did not say whether they held on.)

The French repulsed an enemy patrol in the northern part of this front, and American troops drove back another patrol southwest of Mt. Castellone. Germans attacking along this front suffered heavy losses and failed to gain.

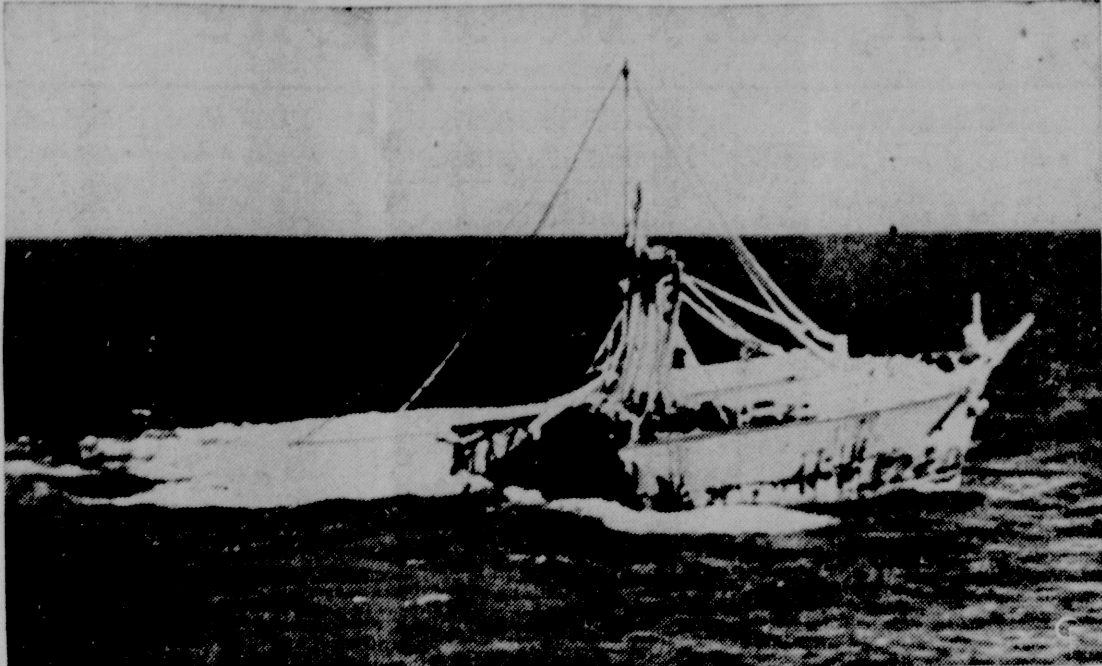

Casualties were reported high as the Germans pressed direct frontal attacks in mass on the Anzio beachhead. The two armies fought desperately at close range on flat terrain with few natural shelters.

The strength and energy of a well-armed British force on the beachhead is concentrated at present on holding on to the strip until the German offensive has spent itself, inflicting the heaviest possible casualties while doing so.

(A dispatch to London from the Fifth army beachhead said Kesselring had visited German forces there, bringing orders from Hitler that the beachhead be wiped out and imposing a time limit for its liquidation.)

The prices of women's clothing in Holland are almost ten times normal.

25 Seamen Lose Lives When Freighter Breaks Up

Despite gallant efforts of U. S. rescue craft, 25 seamen lost their lives and 20 others were rescued when an Allied freighter grounded on treacherous Boone island ledge, Isle of Shoals, off Portsmouth, N. H., during a heavy blizzard. U. S. rescue craft waged an 18-hour battle to save the 7,244-ton vessel, but the storm battered it in half as shown in this picture released by the Navy. (International) just, should be permitted to slow our march to victory."

The report, prepared by Baruch and Hancock at the direction of the White House, actually represents the cumulative effort of many top-flight executives in and out of government, who contributed ideas and criticisms.

It contains 10 main proposals and dozens of lesser ones, ranging from creation of two new White House positions under War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes to a policy statement that once the war is ended government must get out of business and leave the field to private enterprise.

The first objective is stated as "getting us all back to work in peacetime enterprises." This problem is assured by the fact that $50,000,000,000 of current annual production "represents strictly war goods... Which, when peace comes, we will stop making."

"This gap must be filled in large part by civilian production and services," the report says.

Would Dime War Director

For super-control of all agencies dealing with demobilized war veterans and war factory workers, the creation of a "war director" is proposed. The other demobilization official would be a "surplus property administrator with authority to dispose of government-held war materials, from factories to airplanes.

These two offices require only executive action. Several essential proposals, however, require legislation, and there already were rumblings of some discontent on Capitol Hill, despite a generally favorable reaction.

Potentially the most controversial legislation suggested is a post-war tax law which would make known to business now the reduced rates on which it could count for the future. This, the report says, would relieve the uncertainty beginning to hamper war production, ease reconversion of small business, and encourage private enterprise while at the same time providing for reduction in the public debt.

Other legislation would include power for the war and navy departments, maritime commission and similar contracting agencies to advance money in preliminary settlement of war contracts, extension of present laws governing price control, priorities and rationing which expire this year, and expansion of the lending authority of the small war plants corporation.

KNISLEY WITHDRAWS FROM OHIO CONTEST

(By Associated Press)
COLUMBUS, Feb. 19.—Former State Treasurer Clarence H. Knisley of Bainbridge today announced his withdrawal as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor and said he would support Attorney James W. Huffman of Columbus, son-in-law of former Gov. and U. S. Sen. Vie Donahue.

Knisley's withdrawal now leaves four Democratic gubernatorial aspirants in the race. Besides Huffman, they are Frazier Reams of Toledo, a former internal revenue collector for the northwest Ohio district; Frank A. Dye, Columbus attorney, and Walter Baertschi of Toledo, a former state senator. Mayor Frank A. Lausche of Cleveland, still is undecided about entering the race.

Payroll Gain Shown

COLUMBUS — Ohio industrial payrolls increased 3 per cent from September to October, as compared to a gain of less than 1 per cent in total employment, according to a report of the Ohio State university bureau of business research.

As compared with the same month in 1942, Ohio payrolls in October were up 25 per cent and employment was up 6 per cent. Youngstown, alone of the state's eight chief manufacturing centers had a payroll decline amounting to 9 per cent. Employment declines amounting to less than 1 per cent were reported by Canton and Youngstown.

Kill Jews In Holland

quarters. It's the mother base for supplies and major repair work for the whole Southwest Pacific. Thus we were gunning not only for warships but to destroy supplies and neutralize the efficacy of this vast center.

Of course, it's to be hoped that we sent a lot of warships to the bottom, but we are out to render the base impotent. That will remove the chief remaining barrier to Tokyo and the Philippines.

Tokyo yesterday apologized because its fleet hadn't answered Admiral Nimitz's challenge, and come out to fight. The Jap spokesman said the Mikado's navy was "biding its time until the very end" and looking "for the golden opportunity to destroy the enemy at one stroke."

That probably is largely true. The spokesman might have been more accurate if he had said that the Japs were afraid to risk their ships now because they realized they were going to have to defend the motherland at close quarters before long.

Capture of Eniwetok will greatly hasten the neutralization of Truk. Eniwetok is only about 750 miles northeast of the big naval base, and has facilities for airfields, so that Truk could be reached easily by bombers. Possession of Eniwetok also would help neutralize other island bases by severing their supply lines.

Gunner Held Prisoner

WELLSVILLE, Feb. 19.—The International Red Cross yesterday advised Mrs. Sadie Rardon that her son, Staff Sgt. Edward T. Rardon, a machine gunner on a B-17 bomber, is a prisoner of war in Germany after being wounded in action.

in the field, have created a situation which has necessitated drastic economies in the employment of personnel throughout the United States.

Through earlier manpower economies, the Army has reduced its planned size from 8,200,000 to 7,700,000 but it is still 200,000 short of the smaller goal.

COLUMBUS, Feb. 19.—The army's decision to transfer special training troops from colleges to combat assignments will slash thousands of students from the rolls of Buckeye schools, a survey showed today.

Dr. N. N. Luxon, coordinator of the Army Specialized Training program at Ohio State university, reported 1,147 ASTP students are in the three divisions not affected by the order—advanced medicine, dentistry and engineering, while 1,305 others will be required to report for combat duty.

University of Cincinnati officials said 1200 of the 1900 ASTP students were in groups to be discontinued, while all enlisted men at the University of Dayton will be called for combat.

The 500 ASTP trainees at Western Reserve university, Cleveland, are medical and dental students and will not be affected.

bombers, but announced later that two of them had limped back to emergency fields.

Tons of high explosives and thousands of firebombs showered down, hitting at least three churches, two hospitals, a number of school buildings, a hotel, a large suburban store, and many apartments and homes.

Guards said the anti-aircraft barrage was the heaviest ever thrown at enemy raiders.

Fighter planes rose to chase the invaders. At least two were shot down by patrols over the raiding bases in Belgium and Northern France, but there was no report immediately of the number bagged over England. The last London raid Feb. 13 cost the Germans nine out of a force considerably smaller than that used last night.

Charles E. Bedaux Is Suicide Victim

(By Associated Press)
MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 19.—Charles E. Bedaux, international mystery man, died at a hospital here last night and John E. Burling, immigration agent, said he had taken an overdose of sleeping powders and left a suicide note.
Burling said Bedaux swallowed the powders a few hours after he had been informed a grand jury would be convened to decide whether he could be indicted for treason and for communication with high German officials and the Vichy French government.

A special board of inquiry in the United States and could be admitted to this held by immigration officials here since he was brought to Miami from North Africa in an Army plane late in December.

He was taken to the hospital Tuesday in an unconscious condition, and never regained consciousness.

Bedaux achieved prominence in 1937 when it was disclosed he was arranging an American tour for the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. The announcement caused a stir in labor circles—where he was nicknamed "that arch-enemy of labor"—and the trip was subsequently called off.
